••••••• Short Story of the Day.

A REALITY.

From the Windsor Magazine.

The baron had gone to Homburg. The baroness, for some reason known only to herself, chose to visit her newly-made friends, Lord and Lady Watcliffe, at their shooting box in Wensley Dale.

The baroness had never been in England before. She found the Yorkshire climate both cold and damp that September. Her host and hostess were kind and amiable, but it was not to see them that she had come. In her letter of invitation Lady Watcliffe had said:

"I hardly like to ask you to come to Willausbe. It is only a small house, and Troost avenue. we have no house party; our only other we have no house party; our only other guest will be Professor Ray. I think you said you had met him some years ago. Still, if you will venture, and if you still feel the desire you expressed in Paris to see our Yorkshire moors-know how charmed we shall be to see you. The heather is at its best now, so try to give us a day or two."

So the baroness went to Willansbe, and dull she found it. However, as she was generally bored, she did not resent the ennul as do more happily constituted mortals. Besides, she had come for a reason; and she could wait.

"It is said about Professor Ray!" said Lady Watcliffe. "He looks dreadfully ill, but he is so plucky he won't give in. You know, he loves this part of the world, and all the country folk love him. He comes here every year, generally to us. His mother's people had a great deal of land here once, but it was not entailed, so it all got sold. He's the last of the old race."

"I thought he had children?" said the baroness.

WANTED—Situation by colored girl with the baroness.

"O, yes! he has two little boys. Some-how, though, I always think of him as the last of the old race; I knew them all as children, and he alone is left-not for long, I fear!"

The baroness shivered, "What is the matter with him?" she asked.
"No one knows exactly, but the some "No one knows exactly; but it's some-thing incurable, fatal. He looks so ill, but he never talks about himself, and is the best of company in the world; we are de-voted to him."

you know his wife?" asked the

"Do you know his wife?" asked the baroness, and there was a note of real interest in her voice.

"Not well; I've met her; she's little and young, and gay, and the childies sighed the sigh of the childiless woman.

"Have you ever visited them?"

"Once. They have only a little house, such a pretty little gabled house. They are the cheeriest people, and find something to laugh at all day long."

Three days later Rupert Ray and the baroness were sitting on a big round stone in the middle of a heather-covered moor.

The baroness took off her long gloves and her white hands lay folded in her lap. When she looked down you felt she could not possibly assume a prettier attitude. Her eyelashes were so long and so curry. But when she looked down you felt she could not possibly assume a prettier attitude. Her eyelashes were so long and so curry. But when she looked down you felt she could not possibly assume a prettier attitude. Her eyelashes were so long and so curry. But when she looked up, especially if she looked at you, it was plain that her greatest charm lay in the eyes themselves—so big, and blue and childlike.

Rupert Ray turned himself, regarding her with unfelgned pleasure. "It is good to see you again, Rosie; you are prettier than ever."
